What are you Thankful For?

This season brings to mind several reasons for being thankful. With hard times like these communities come together during the holidays to share with strangers food and thanks. We are reminded that some have it better, and some don't have anything. But the season brings us all together to celebrate life, family, and friends.

Please take the time to smile at a stranger. Take the time to listen to a friend or co-worker, let the other person pass when driving, take the time to appreciate the little things in life, from the changing of the trees to the construction around town. Be thankful for life, progress, and that you are part of something bigger, and that tomorrow is never guaranteed, so live life today!
